Domaine Cataraqi, Quebec City

The history of Cataraqi dates back to 1831 when timber merchant James Bell Forsyth established an estate here, naming it in honour of his native Kingston (formerly Fort Cataraqi) in Upper Canada. Henry Burstall, another timber merchant, acquired the property, and it was he who constructed the villa we see today. Cataraqi was leased for a time by the Governor General of the Province of Canada, and in 1860 it was enlarged to accommodate Edward, the Prince of Wales. Banker and importer Charles

Eleazar Levey acquired the property in 1863, adding greenhouses and a new wing to the building. The Rhodes family acquired Cataraqi in 1905. Catherine Rhodes and her husband Percyval Tudor-Hart returned the estate's English gardens to their former glory. Eventually, the Government of Quebec acquired Cataraqi, recognizing it as a historic site in 1975. In 1995, Cataraqi became a garden-museum. Today, it is owned by the Commission de la capitale nationale du Québec.
